

MICROGRAPH

the NN, and a tongue or sucker O, which I have out. Besides these, it has also two chaps somewhat like those of an Ant, but I could not be sure they were flap'd very like the blades of a pair and were opened and shut just after the same manner. This little brute Creature bite and pierce the blood of an Animal, leaving the skin inflamed and red. These parts are very difficult to be distinguished, they lie covered between the forefeet, other particulars, which, being more obvious, and of more information, I shall pass by, and refer to the figure.

Obser. LIV. Of a Louse

This is a Creature so officious, that 'twill be one time or other, so bulie, and so impudent ding it self in every ones company, and so proud that it fears not to trample on the best, and affect Crown; feeds and lives very high, and that makany one by the ears that comes in its way, and will has drawn blood: it is troubled at nothing so scratches his head, as knowing that man is plotting mischief against it, and that makes it oftentimes and lower place; and run behind a mans back, the against the hair; which ill conditions of it having then trusted, would exempt me from making any I did not my faithful Mercury, my Microscope, be-mon of it. For this has discovered to me, by me the calf on it, that it is a Creature of a very odd and like that exprest in 35. scheme marked with Conical, but is a little flatted on the upper and most part of which, on either side behind the head the place where other Creatures ears stand) are large goggle eyes BB, looking backwards, and fer-ring small cilia or hairs that incomps it, so that it has a very good foresight: It does not seem to have therefore perhaps its eyes were so placed, that it might see with its fore-legs; and perhaps this may be the reason it much avoid and run from the light behind them, for the shady and dark recesses of the hair, and then eye having a great aperture, the open and clear light of the Sun, must needs very much offend them; so that receiving any injury from the hairs through which F 12